THE UNION JACK.

To judge from the correspondence which we have lately printed, there would seem to be no little confusion of mind in many quarters concerning the character, the use, and even the identity of the national ment as to what the national flag is. Lord Hawkesbury insists that it is the Red Ensign and nothing else. No doubt he is right in the sense that the Red Ensign proclaims the nationality of the unprivileged British merchant vessel, and is the only flag that can lawfully be displayed by such a vessel as the recognized symbol of its nationality. But, if the Red Ensign is the only flag that can properly be called national, how comes it that the flag flying at the Victoria Tower whenever Parliament is sitting is not the Red Ensign, but the Union Jack? The question is not altogether without difficulty. perhaps. But, with all respect for Lord Hawkesbury, we must, as at present advised, hold the better opinion to be that the Union Jack is the national flag properly so-called, the Red Ensign being that form of it which is prescribed by law as the symbol of the nationality of every British vessel at sea, not being a man-of-war or a wessel otherwise privileged to wear a different ensign. That the Royal Standard is not the national flag, nor a national flag in any sense, is a proposition too clear to admit of dispute. It is the personal flag of the Sovereign, and can be displayed by a subject only by special permission of the Sovereign, and this, from the nature of the case, is very rarely accorded. This is established beyond a doubt by the letter of Lord Knollys to the Vicar of St. Michael's, Folkestone, which 2179 we printed on June 7. The Vicar stated that his congregation had spent £10 in buying a Royal Standard, 'thinking that they would be able to fly the flag from the church tower as usual, and he asked that an exception might be made in their favour. Sir Francis Knollys, as he then was, replied 'that the Royal Standard, which is the King's personal flag, can only be hoisted at the Coronation. If permission were given in one case, it would be impossible to refuse it in any others. I must remind you, he added, however,

that you can always fly the Union Jack." It would seem from this that, in the opinion of the King's Private Secretary-which we may be sure was not lightly given-the proper flag to fly on any festive occasion is 2113 the Union Jack. Lord Hawkesbury might arge, perhaps, that this is merely an obiter dictum, and that it does not finally establish the title of the Union Jack to be regarded as the only true national flag. But surely this question is decided by the fact that the Union Jack is a feature common, and the only feature common, to all ensigns, whether white, red, or blue, which are worn by British ships at sea. Ensigns are not merely flage; they are essentially distinguishing flags. White, red, and blue ensigns are one and all symbols of British IN present German Club, including two nationality as distinct from all other nationalities, and, as between themselves, they distinguish different classes or categories of British ships. The display of the Union Jack is the international mark of all three, the colour of the fly being only a municipal distinction, so to speak. The same conclusion seems to follow, also, from the history and structure of the Cheap EUROPEAN FLATS in Wanchai | Union Jack. This flag is a combination of the original flags of the three countries now consolidated into the United Kingdom.

Some people are weakly and emaciated, yet they are not, to say, sick. Their appetites are fair, they eat good, wholesome food, but they cannot gain flesh. The face is, their nutritive functions are deficient. The food may even be digested, but is not properly assimilated. With loss of, or lack of, sufficient flesh there is a corresponding decline of strength and vigour. Comelines. of form is dependent upon graceful curves, plumpness, rather than upon angles. Bony prominences, hollow cheeks and eyes, are not pleasing to the sight.

The original national flug of England was the Cross of St. George, a rectangular red cross on a white ground. The original national flag of Scotland was the Cross of St. Andrew, a diagonal white cross or saltire on a WANT TO KNOW blue ground. The original national flag of Ireland, said to have been horrowed from the arms of the Geraldines, was a red saltire on a white ground. When James I. succeeded to the throne of England and thus united the two Monarchies, the St. Andrew's Cross was adopted as the ground of the common national flag, the St. George's Cross being superposed upon it, and the red cross having a uniform white margin to indicate the original ground of the English national flag. This was the criginal Union Jack, which is thought by some to have been so called after the King, who frequently signed his name 'Jacques.' During the Commonwealth the Jack was retained, but an Irish hare was superposed at its centre. This was removed at the Restoration, as being, for some reason or other, as Pepys records, 'very offensive to the King.' The Union Jack thereafter remained unchanged until 1801, when the Act of Union with Ireland brought about the final change which gave us the present national flag. The Irish rec saltire was then superposed on the Scotch white saltire. But the white margin of the Irish red cross was not made uniform throughout, because that, on analogy of the uniform margin English red cross, indicated only the ground of the Irish would thereby have obliterated the THE Undersigned, having been appointed Scotch white saltire altogether, leaving only | AGENTS of the above Society in Hongthe blue ground in the angles to indicate kong, are prepared to issue Policies against the original national flag of Scotland. Such is the historical evolution of the indicate that the Union Jack is, and must be, the only national flag properly soprecision and authority as regards ships at Current Rates. sea than as regards its employment by private citizens on shore. At sea the national flag, in whatever form it is lawfully displayed, is an international symbol of nationality which confers certain definite rights, privileges, and immunities. It must not, therefore, be so used as to confound different classes of ships entitled to wear different forms of it, nor must it ! be so used by merchant vessels of any various purposes by ships of the Royal Navy. For this reason the senior naval use of any form of the national flag by and the Conditions will be found unusually; any and every British vessel affoat, liberal. But on land there would seem to be no occasion for the observance of such precision nor for the exercise of such authority. The national pride in the national flag should suffice to restrain its improper use and display, and all that seems to be needed is a wider diffusion to accurate knowledge on the subject. If should be a repreach to every loyal and patriotic citizen not to know what the national flag is, what are its proper form and construction, and what is the proper use and symbolism of the several forms of it; and, were this the case, public opinion might safely be trusted to discountenance the use of all forms of it not properly constructed, or not recognized by established usage and authority. The form, construction, history, and proper usage of the national dag might well be made a definite subject of teaching in every school in the kingdom. It is full of interest and contains a good deal of history in a very attractive form. It makes no difference for this purpose whether the national flag is, as we think, the Union Jack or the Red Ensign, as Lord Hawkesbury insists, since no one can understand the Red Ensign unless he first understand the Union Jack. If this were done, the illicit and improper forms of the national flag, badly hoisted, of which we have seen so many examples of late, would soon dis appear altogether. You can always fly the Union Jack, says Lord Knollys. Provided it is the Union Jack, properly made and properly hoisted, it does not much matter, on shore, whether it is flown in the e ensign duly recognized by authority. But,

An Awkward Fix. A Jewish resident, who is possessed of considerable wealth, found himself in an uncomfortable situation yesterday (says the Straits Times of the 30th ult.), when he was arrested by the police on suspicion of being connected with the forgery of Hongkong and Shanghai Bank note, issued at Penang. The name is withheld for obvious reasons, as it was found that the gentleman was totally ignorant of the forgery, and he was subsequently released. It happened in the following way. The gentleman paid into the Chartered Bank here a sum of about $2,000. Amongst the notes which he tendered was a $5 H. & S. Bank note the figures of which had been made to read '$50.' The addition of the '0' had been rather clumsily done, as paint or ink that was used in the process had smeared to an extent that would betray the forgery to an observer. The figure '0' was, also, smaller than that on n genuine $50 note. It seemed that the note had been accepted by the persons Samuel Samuel & Co. at 90 was placed by above referred to as a $50 bill, though the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank have ac-

American Killed in Negros.

Manila papers report the murder near Bacolod, in the island of Negros, of Mr D. C. Montgomery, Deputy Division Superintendent in the Educational Department. The motive of the crime was robbery. He was engaged in missionary work in South America and was appointed a teacher in the Philippines on July 10, 1901. He leaves a widow, H.E. Sheng Kung-pao.

- As predicted (says the N-.C. Daily News) through the death of his father, the late Shêng Hsio-jen, Shêng Kung-pao has had to give up his two highest posts, namely, the Senior Vice-Presidency of the Board of Works and the Assistant High Commissionership of Commerce. This, according to official etiquette, was what might have been expected, but it is the manner with which the pleasure of the Throne was signified that surprises Sheng Kung-pao's friends and which doubtless touches Sheng Kung-pao sore at this moment, showing to him and his friends that, powerful in certain ways though he and his supporters in Peking may be, he has much more powerful enemies at Court than he and they are aware of. Properly speaking, if Sheng Kung-pao is Mr J. R. Elliott, who came out to it was not in line with the '5' and the what his friends consider him, an Imperial edict should have been issued upon receipt at Peking of H.E. Lü Hai-huan's telegram announcing the death of Sheng's father, expressing regret at the occurrence, and followed by the declaration that as Sheng Hsuan-huai's services and talents are such that the Government cannot well words 'five dollars, inscribed upon its replace them on the spur of the moment, it is face had not been tampered with. Wu Ting-fang, retiring Chinese Minister at Washington. In a word, the characters Sheng Hauan. huai ' (Shêng Kung-pao's official name) de not appear in any of the Imperial decrees in question. There is much speculation in local mandarin circles at the deliberate slight placed upon this well-known official by the Imperial Court, so far without any satisfactory explanation. A private dispatch from Peking has however arrived, in which it is hinted that the story of various rice transactions had reached certain persons at Court, and that some expression of the Imperial displeasure was on the point of being proclaimed when the news of Shong Haio-jen's death was received at the

THERE WERE SNAKES IN THOSE DAYS! To the Editor of the CHINA MAIL.

Inone, 29th October, 1902. SIR,—I see by the China Mail of September 29 that the gardener of the Bay View Hotel was bitten by a snake. As you say, it is a likely place for that kind of reptile. I recollect when the place was a Police Station, I, with a few Police friends, was sitting on the front veranda, top side, and just a minute before the lamps were lighted a dandy of the snake species reached down from over the rafters. I thought he was reaching for the whiskey. I am not quite sure. I only saw twenty-five feet of his highness; that was enough. It was surprising how sudden that little party broke up. None of us thought that there were any stairs attached to the building. I know I did not. I just bounded from the veranda cannoned off the garden wall on to the Sergeant's dog that was lying asleep in the middle of the road. Then knew I had made the leap of my life, and lowered the world's record for two miles. joined the I.O.G.T. same night. The
